Since 1997, East Bay Housing Organizations (EBHO) has released the Affordable Housing Guidebook each May during our annual Affordable Housing Week. We’re proud to share this essential resource during our 30th anniversary year!

In keeping with our theme, “Built to Last,” this year’s Guidebook provides perspectives on the past, present and future of affordable housing. Articles by EBHO staff and members explore topics including the power of organizing affordable housing residents, the history of EBHO, and new avenues for local advocacy. Property profiles illuminate just a few of the great affordable housing developments that are becoming lasting community assets, while resident stories provide a snapshot of who lives in affordable homes. Resource listings help those who need housing assistance. And throughout, we provide information about how to get involved in promoting affordable housing.

How do I use this Guidebook?

Advocates and community members: Inform your neighbors and your constituencies about affordable housing efforts and coalitions, and discover ways to make a difference.

Elected officials and local government staff: See what affordable housing developments could look like in your community, meet some of the people who benefit from affordable housing, and learn more about the policy and funding issues involved in solving the housing crisis.

People looking for affordable housing: Turn to pages 16, 24 and 25 for resources and tips to help you find and keep affordable housing. Learn about different kinds of affordable housing and how you can help build support for more housing opportunities.

Affordable housing developers: Learn about land use and funding campaigns where your voice is needed, and use the property profiles and resident stories as tools to make the case for more affordable housing.

Funders: Find out about new, innovative affordable housing developments and the non-profit organizations behind them. See how your community investments in housing and advocacy are changing the lives of real people.

About EBHO

Welcome to the 18th Annual Edition of East Bay Housing Organizations’ Affordable Housing Guidebook. We are honored to continue to provide this essential resource for advocates and developers, people seeking affordable homes, elected and community leaders, and the public. We publish the Guidebook because we know that when families, seniors and people with disabilities have homes that are affordable and safe, communities can thrive. Affordable homes have a lasting impact, benefiting people and neighborhoods for generations.

This year marks EBHO’s 30th Anniversary, and the theme of this year’s guidebook is “EBHO at 30: Built to Last.” It’s been a long and inspiring journey. From EBHO’s humble beginnings in 1984, we have grown our vibrant community of members to over 350 organizations and individuals. Together, we have led successful campaigns and diverse coalitions across the East Bay and beyond. Thousands of affordable homes have been built and preserved because of our persistent advocacy.

EBHO continues to tap the vision and knowledge of our grassroots activists, advocates and professionals. We are relentlessly committed to our communities across the East Bay, and deeply wed to the vision of quality affordable housing for all. We are determined to build leadership and collaborations that can speak with a unified and powerful voice.

We want to thank you for our success over the last 30 years, and welcome you to keep shaping and growing EBHO. We are proud of our founding members, the cohorts from each decade, and those who have recently joined us. We sincerely appreciate our supporters and partners.

Thank you for your time and generosity, and most of all, for your dedication over these many years.

We look forward to our next 30 years together.

Sincerely,

Affordable housing is more than bricks and mortar. For thousands of families, seniors, people with disabilities, and veterans across the East Bay, having a safe, affordable home means not having to decide between paying rent and buying groceries or school supplies. It means being able to save and plan for the future and create connections with neighbors.

We are East Bay Housing Organizations (EBHO), a coalition of organizations and individual leaders who believe that everyone should have these opportunities. Together, we build communities that last. For 30 years, EBHO has been the leading affordable housing advocacy organization in Alameda and Contra Costa Counties. Through our programs, committees and campaigns, we work to protect and expand affordable housing opportunities for the lowest-income communities in the East Bay. Since 1984, we have grown and galvanized our dynamic membership, now over 350 organizations and community leaders, to advocate for affordable housing and equitable housing policies at the neighborhood, city, county, regional and state levels.

Who are EBHO’s members?
Non-profit housing developers, Architects and builders, Labor unions, Planners, Homelessness and housing advocates, Service providers, City and county agencies, Financial institutions, Individual leaders in East Bay communities and congregations, Environmental and social justice organizations…and more.

How does EBHO work?
Collectively, our staff and members:

Educate and engage elected representatives, neighborhood and civic associations, faith-based and community organizations, and the general public about the great value of affordable housing and the benefit of investing in it:

Advocate for policy changes in local, city, county and statewide efforts to strengthen the political and funding climate for affordable housing preservation and development;

Organize and empower residents and staff of affordable housing properties, as well as other housing stakeholders, to take leadership and become advocates; and

Build strong coalitions with our interfaith, community, labor, environmental and industry partners to promote a shared vision for equitable communities.

Get involved!
Want to support affordable housing in your community? EBHO can help you or your organization in the following ways:

- Get information. Learn about current innovative affordable housing initiatives and policies;
- Take action. Join our committees or get action alerts and updates about local, regional and statewide campaigns;
- Make connections. Tap into our network and attend our events as we bring people together to create effective housing solutions that promote equity and diversity in our East Bay communities.

BHO began over 30 years ago as a series of informal, monthly brown bag lunches. Affordable housing developers, architects, advocates, city staff and community activists gathered to discuss how to advance affordable housing in Oakland. They worked together on project-specific and citywide affordable housing and tenants’ rights policies.

In 1984, OCCUR (Oakland Citizens Committee for Urban Renewal) wrote a grant and dedicated a half-time staff person to support and incubate EBHO, then called Oakland Housing Organizations (OHO). Although still volunteer-led, the organization became more formalized with an action agenda and working committees.

Achievements and growth

In 1989, EBHO led a collaborative response to the Loma Prieta earthquake. A series of residential hotels—housing of last resort for very low-income people—were damaged, displacing hundreds of people. Through OHO, the non-profit developer community came together to ensure these buildings would be rehabilitated and would remain deeply affordable.

In 1995, OHO spun off from OCCUR, expanded to all of Alameda County and incorporated as EBHO with its first Board of Directors. Building upon its education campaigns, EBHO inaugurated Affordable Housing Week and published its first Affordable Housing Guidebook in 1997. In 1999, EBHO expanded to all of Contra Costa County. Since 1999, EBHO has continued to grow in numbers and impact. In 2014, with over 350 members, EBHO is recognized as the leading voice for affordable housing in the East Bay. Through its active membership base, EBHO continues to spearhead local and regional education, advocacy and coalition-building campaigns.

Campaign wins and growing the movement

EBHO organizes for inclusive communities by building broad-based, effective and powerful coalitions. Wins range from securing 27% affordable housing for very low-income families at Oakland’s Uptown in 2004 to Concord’s groundbreaking commitment to 25% affordable housing (over 3,000 homes) in the Concord Naval Weapons Station Reuse Plan in 2012.

EBHO fights for more funds for affordable homes. Wins range from Oakland’s commitment to devote 25% of Redevelopment’s tax increment to affordable housing in 2001 to its 25% commitment of ongoing Redevelopment “boomerang” funds in 2013.

EBHO advocates for land use and zoning policies in Housing Element campaigns, and partners with cities throughout the East Bay to strengthen their affordable housing policies. Wins range from securing multifamily zoning in Fremont in 2004, to instituting overlay zoning in Concord and Alameda in 2012.

EBHO broadens the base of people who passionately raise their voices for quality housing for the lowest-income, highest-need communities. EBHO established the Interfaith Communities United for Affordable Housing in 2003 and created EBHO’s Resident and Community Organizing Program in 2009.
For 30 years, EBHO has stayed true to its roots. It remains a membership-driven organization—a vibrant and respected community of advocates and professionals, combining strong organizing capacity and deep technical expertise. Thousands of affordable homes have been built as a result of EBHO’s effective advocacy.

Reflections from EBHO’s founders and long-timers:

Origins

James Vann: “These early brown bag lunches grew into the work that we now know today as EBHO…. They brought together a body of people interested in housing issues, who began to formulate a housing philosophy for Oakland.”

Barbara Sanders: “The goals were to come together to collectively influence the City Council, work together against NIMBY-ism (not in my backyard), increase funds for affordable rental housing, share information, and work for goals related to local policy. We participated as a team…..”

Lynette Lee: “The most important role EBHO played and plays is bringing together affordable housing advocates, developers, people of faith, local public officials, etc., to work on issues together and to educate the general public about why affordable housing is so important.”

Achievements and growth

Alex Salazar: “EBHO has integrated community organizing into the organization’s core, and has led coalition-building efforts on regional campaigns. EBHO’s impact is greater and broader than it was 10 years ago.”

Mike Rawson: “By including communities from all over the East Bay, it provided impetus and resources for strong advocacy in more communities and furthered general awareness about the crisis and importance of affordable housing…..”

Elissa Dennis: “The major factor for EBHO’s success was building the reputation so everyone in the affordable housing movement wants to participate through EBHO. EBHO is respected at City Councils and by policymakers in the region.”

Campaign wins and growing the movement

Elissa Dennis: “EBHO’s most effective campaigns used the deep technical and policy expertise of its members along with organizing skills to bring in coalition partners and now affordable housing residents. … EBHO gets the crowds and the right people to influence policymakers.”

Maryann Leshin: “The Affordable Housing Week tours and the connectedness with local electeds really helps the staff in those cities, as well as public officials, who support affordable housing to make the case for projects that are always subject to opposition.”

Jeff Levin: “EBHO is both an advocate for affordable housing for low-income people and an association representing non-profit developers and other housing professionals. While this sometimes creates some tensions, this dual role makes EBHO a unique and powerful voice for affordable housing.”

Mike Pyatok: “EBHO is the glue that unites everyone engaged in creating and maintaining affordable housing for our more vulnerable neighbors. It is the shared meeting ground, convening all concerned about these housing issues, engaging them in constructive conversations that produce the strategies…..”

EBHO’s 2012 win on the Concord Naval Weapons Station ensures that future growth will include affordable homes, quality jobs, and open space.

In the last five years, EBHO’s membership has grown to include powerful resident leaders like Mayme Lincoln.

Many thanks to the EBHO founders and long-time leaders for contributing to this article.
What does it mean for housing to be affordable, and why does it matter so much right now? Quite simply, an affordable home provides the foundation for good health, economic and educational success, and stable neighborhoods. These benefits are so fundamental that for many decades the government, non-profits and faith communities have worked to provide affordable, quality housing. The federal government has determined that housing is “affordable” if it costs no more than 30% of a household’s income, leaving enough for essentials like food, transportation, health care and child care. Truly affordable housing can even allow people to save for emergencies, or for dreams like higher education and homeownership.

But when people struggle to afford a home, they often make tough choices that affect not just their household but the whole community. Families may lose community connections and stability after moving to less expensive housing—and the region and the environment suffer from more traffic and longer commutes. People’s health is affected by living in homes with hazards like lead or mold, and by the stress of making ends meet. Employers find it hard to grow when housing is too costly for their workers. These issues are exacerbated by rapidly rising rents, and today in California we have fewer legal and funding tools to create and preserve affordable housing than we did even five years ago. In response, non-profits like EBHO’s members work to provide housing and shelter for lower-income people with public and private support. Yet despite the creation of thousands of affordable homes since EBHO’s founding in 1984, economic recessions and shrinking public resources have contributed to an ongoing affordable housing shortage, the emergence of homelessness as a major problem in the U.S., and a growing gap between wages and housing prices. While the adjusted median household income in California dropped by 8% between 2000 and 2012, the adjusted median rent rose by more than 20%.¹

The crisis is especially clear in the beautiful and booming Bay Area: Alameda and Contra Costa Counties saw home prices rise 42% and 38% respectively after the recession. While this “hot housing market” brings profit to some, for lower-income people it means making serious compromises—or losing housing all together. In 2013, EveryOne Home found that 55% of the 4,264 homeless people in Alameda County were living outdoors instead of in shelters—the same year the county’s federal funding for homelessness was cut by over a million dollars.

The flip side of a strong economy often manifests as displacement: people are pushed out of their communities because of rising housing costs or other neighborhood changes. The U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development ranked the East Bay as the third most expensive rental market in the country. High rents, foreclosures, evictions and condo conversions limit housing choices for everyone, but particularly for lower-income people, people of color, or those with special needs who already face barriers or discrimination. Richmond and Oakland each lost 25% of their African-American population between 2000 and 2010—a loss unlikely to reverse with current demographic trends. Preserving and building

Affordable housing has become a crucial piece of upholding racial and economic diversity. (See “Out of the Frying Pan” on page 12.) Fired up by this need, advocates, residents and public leaders continue to find opportunity in crisis. Over the last few decades, the East Bay has become a leader in housing options, including permanently affordable, service-enriched non-profit housing; innovative models like co-housing and land trusts; programs that rehab foreclosed homes; and groundbreaking collaborations to house homeless people.

Bright spots for this year — and the next 30 years — include:

Growing coalitions to combat displacement
Tenant advocates, rental housing providers, homeownership groups and others have found common cause in stabilizing communities. Together, they’re working to improve the habitability of existing homes, protect renters, recapture foreclosed properties as community assets, and create new affordable homes.

Advocacy in local and regional planning processes
Land use plans can promote affordable homes through city-level policies, funding and sites. Advocates are ensuring that Housing Elements and station area plans include strong language on affordability and link housing to transportation investments. Plan Bay Area, adopted in mid-2013, took a step in this direction on the regional level thanks to the work of equity advocates. (See “Think Regionally, Act Locally” on page 14.)

Combining the power of a movement with the expertise of an industry
In 2013, EBHO won a major victory when it persuaded Oakland to set aside former redevelopment funds for affordable housing (see pages 8–9). Several local cities and counties have passed similar policies after hearing both the economic and moral cases from low-income residents, affordable housing professionals, labor leaders, faith communities and grassroots advocates.

Awareness of income inequality
From the President in his State of the Union speech to big-city mayors and pastors, people are speaking out about those falling through the cracks in our economy—and about the need for both public and private actors to invest in communities. New partnerships are linking housing justice to other social justice issues such as the minimum wage and statewide tax policy reform.

We hope that 30 years from now, everyone has a healthy and affordable place to live. Until then, EBHO will continue to educate, organize and advocate so everyone knows what affordable housing is and why it matters in the East Bay and beyond.

How many hours would these East Bay residents have to work to afford an apartment?
Most people who live in affordable housing are employed. A sample of typical jobs and average wages below shows that many workers would qualify as “low-income” in the Bay Area and would spend far more than 30% of their income to afford housing (note that HUD considers those spending more than 50% of their income on housing to be at risk of homelessness).

In the spring of 2013, Oakland’s city leaders declared that the city had no money for affordable housing. By that fall, the mayor, City Council members, affordable housing residents and advocates were all cheering together as the city committed millions of dollars to affordable housing for years to come. How did this happen?

This turnaround was just one of the tangible wins of EBHO’s Resident and Community Organizing Program. Working in partnership with our members and allies, our program has engaged thousands of residents and staff in campaigns, trainings and advocacy. More importantly, our base-building efforts are increasing housing access for those who need it most by generating more resources and awareness of the need for more affordable homes.

When the State of California abolished Redevelopment agencies, it eliminated the largest source of local financing for affordable housing: over $1 billion a year. This set in motion a series of campaign fights around the state to secure future funding for affordable housing. EBHO focused on where we could make a difference in the East Bay. We knew that the City of Oakland was particularly hard-hit, given its heavy reliance on Redevelopment as a source of financing. While Oakland had already developed and preserved thousands of affordable homes for low-income people with redevelopment dollars, the need was still sky-high and growing. It was particularly alarming when the proposed city budget zeroed out funds for affordable housing. Without Redevelopment, EBHO was told that there was no money for affordable housing.

EBHO kicked into high gear and initiated a Speak Out for Affordable Housing! Oakland Budget Campaign. We advocated for the dedication of “boomerang funds” for affordable housing. “Boomerang funds” are the portion of former redevelopment property tax increment revenues that now flow back to local jurisdictions as general fund dollars. (See “How Do We Fund Housing in a Post-Redevelopment World?” on page 15.)

EBHO’s Speak Out for Affordable Housing! Oakland Budget Campaign mobilized nearly 1,000 affordable housing residents,
EBHO members, community and faith leaders, and concerned citizens from every part of Oakland to write letters, make calls, meet with City Council members, and speak out at public meetings and hearings. Residents told their stories about how affordable housing strengthens communities, improves health and public safety, helps kids succeed in school, and creates quality jobs. They also brought City Council members to visit their communities, organized their neighbors to sign letters of support, and went to meetings with their council representatives.

Resident leaders advocated alongside hundreds of EBHO members, creating an unbeatable team. EBHO mobilized citywide, working with our members and dedicated resident leaders from nearly twenty affordable housing developments to attend public forums to testify before the Oakland City Council and the mayor.

The result? Immediate and long-term funding for affordable housing in Oakland. In 2013, the Oakland City Council made two key decisions to fund affordable housing. The council decided to include $1.8 million in the current budget for affordable housing, and it passed a policy proposal that sets aside 25% of all future boomerang funds for Oakland’s Affordable Housing Trust Fund. While these funds represent a fraction of what is needed and what was lost, they ensure a continued pipeline of funds for affordable housing development and preservation. They form a base to build upon as we continue to campaign for sustainable sources of funding for affordable homes locally, regionally and statewide.

The campaign exemplifies the power of collaboration, community organizing and advocacy in advancing housing options for our lowest-income communities, and it serves as a model for future campaigns. Engaging residents and investing in leadership development has contributed greatly to EBHO’s capacity to win more resources for affordable housing in the region and beyond—and has empowered these residents to keep up the fight for their neighborhoods and communities.

Fran Beal is a seasoned civil rights leader and affordable housing resident in Oakland. She played a key role in the campaign and wrote this letter to her council member:

“We would like to remind you of who we are and some of the ways we have benefited from affordable housing. Several of our residents are retired teachers or social workers. Others have devoted their working lives to the struggle for social justice. Still others are still working, and we have a large percentage of retirees who still contribute to society by volunteering in many community activities. We compose a mélange of Asian, African American, white and some Hispanic residents, reflecting the racial diversity that Oakland at large represents. Some are immigrants; some have resided and worked here all their lives.

“All of us benefit from being able to live in safe and healthful environments. Many of the women have worked all their lives while also rearing their children and taking the main responsibility for the family. We now have reached the age where we have earned the right to live a life of dignity, a life that affordable housing can help achieve. We also want to ensure that other low income and moderate income people have access to safe and secure housing as a basis for creating a stable community in Oakland. An independent life is a happy life and affordable housing creates the basis for this goal.”

EBHO’s Interfaith Communities United for Affordable Housing (ICU) builds upon a long tradition of people of faith standing up for housing justice. Faith communities have historically advocated for and created affordable housing, even where a community didn’t (at first) believe it belonged.

For three decades, the faith community has played a key leadership role in EBHO. In 2004, EBHO hired Rev. Phil Lawson. ICU lifts up the voice of the faith community to join with the voices of non-profit developers, affordable housing residents, and EBHO’s other dedicated members.

While Phil retired in 2011, he remains actively engaged in ICU alongside current Director of Interfaith Programs Rev. Sandhya Jha.

In 2013, religious leaders stood beside residents as they advocated for affordable housing funding in the Oakland City Council chambers. People of faith attended Housing Element meetings in Orinda and planning meetings in Walnut Creek. They participated in EBHO’s Local Lobby Day with residents and developers. They welcomed homeless and formerly homeless advocates and non-profit developers to speak during EBHO’s Housing Sabbath, and congregations supported the California Homes and Jobs Act, which would create a dedicated source of funding for affordable homes.

At the ninth annual Interfaith Breakfast in September 2013, Buddhist, Sikh, Catholic, Protestant, Muslim and Jewish religious leaders discussed taking action on issues including homelessness, gentrification and senior housing, and they spoke about the spiritual core that drives them to do this work. The Interfaith Breakfast is a bedrock of ICU, bringing communities together to provide education and inspiration.

“…as people of faith, we can encourage our policy-makers to be their best selves and build a community where all have an equal opportunity to live in safe and comfortable homes.”

ICU is also developing Rapid Response Teams to train people of faith to address housing issues as they emerge. Policy issues vary from town to town, but as people of faith, we can encourage our policymakers to be their best selves and build a community where all have an equal opportunity to live in safe and comfortable homes.

ICU will continue to work with like-minded groups on linked justice issues. We’re collaborating with the Black Alliance for Just Immigration and the Faith Alliance for a Moral Economy on a resource guide investigating the intersection of mass incarceration, immigration issues, worker rights and housing justice.

We’ve begun educating people of faith about how the faith community can play a role in affordable housing advocacy, working with EBHO’s strong Resident and Community Organizing Program and other EBHO committees. Committed members of the religious community have already strengthened the movement for affordable housing; in 2014, we continue to build on that strength.

For 30 years, EBHO members have come together around the shared belief that all people—low-income families, people with disabilities, veterans, workers, youth and seniors—deserve a safe, healthy and secure place to call home. EBHO’s membership comprises over 350 organizations and individuals. We are affordable housing developers, faith leaders, architects, builders, homeless service providers and advocates, affordable housing residents, city and county agencies, and people like you. Join our movement to promote quality affordable homes in the East Bay.

Member campaigns and committees

- Affordable Housing Week brings together thousands of people each May to participate in tours, groundbreakings, grand openings, panels, workshops and more across the East Bay. Join us to learn and celebrate, or work with us to host an event. Every May we also release this Guidebook, the leading affordable housing resource in the East Bay.

- Concord Campaign & Committee advocates with a broad-based community coalition for affordable housing, quality jobs, open space, sustainable development, and vibrant, walkable neighborhoods at the Concord Naval Weapons Station and citywide.

- East Bay Regional Policy Committee provides technical assistance, advocacy, and innovative policy tools on issues including Land Value Recapture, post-Redevelopment funding campaigns, implementation of Plan Bay Area and effective Housing Elements.

- Foreclosures & Affordable Housing Working Group strategizes with and convenes housing, financial, policy and grassroots organizations that are developing responses to foreclosures that stabilize neighborhoods and preserve affordability.

- Interfaith Communities United for Affordable Housing (ICU) builds partnerships with interfaith and social justice organizations, homeless advocates, and faith leaders with the goal of housing justice for all. Organizes “Shelter in a Time of Storms” breakfast each fall and Housing Sabbath during Affordable Housing Week.

- Oakland Campaigns & Committee develops advocacy campaigns on major developments and citywide policies; advances funding, policy and land-use strategies; and organizes coalitions to address Oakland’s housing needs.

- Resident & Community Organizing Program Committee trains, organizes and mobilizes affordable housing residents to get involved in advocacy efforts. Focuses on issues ranging from neighborhood planning processes to statewide funding efforts and legislation.

Other ways to take action...

- Educate yourself and others about affordable housing’s role in creating vibrant communities. Distribute EBHO’s Affordable Housing Guidebook and attend EBHO’s workshops and trainings.

- Support affordable housing proposals in your neighborhood. Participate in the community process for the Housing Element and other plans, and encourage your neighbors to do the same.

- Testify at public hearings and city council meetings.

- Call and write your elected officials and ask them to support affordable housing.

- Mobilize and engage your organization, neighborhood group, congregation, school and/or union.

As the Bay Area enters a post-recession boom, skyrocketing rents in many neighborhoods are once again forcing long-time residents from their homes. This displacement not only uproots families and disrupts communities, it often forces low-income people to resettle at the fringes of the region—disconnected from jobs, transit, and essential services.

Recent reports paint an urgent picture of the damage being done to individual families and the Bay Area by the wave of gentrification and displacement sparked by an overheated housing market.

A 2012 report from the Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco, “The Suburbanization of Poverty in the Bay Area,” found region-wide suburban poverty rose 16% between 2000 and 2009, compared to a 7% increase in urban areas, and “Blacks and Hispanics saw the greatest percentage growth in suburban poverty.” While our state hopes to get more people living near transit, the number of low-income people living within a half-mile of a rail station dropped between 2000 and 2009.

Plan Bay Area, a recently adopted 28-year land use and transportation plan, strives to direct 80% of the region’s anticipated 2.1 million new residents into areas near transit, which are also predominantly low-income neighborhoods. This development pattern has been heralded by some as “smart growth.” But as the increasing attractiveness of these “transit-oriented development” areas translates into higher housing costs, there is often displacement of long-term low-income residents. Concentrated growth is only “smart” if it includes affordable housing and connections to economic opportunity.

West Oakland is a key example of this trend. Bisected by freeway and BART construction in the 1950s and ‘60s, the vibrant neighborhood’s African-American community has suffered from decades of polluted air, poor access to basic resources, and under-funded schools and community facilities. As public and private forces now reinvest in West Oakland because of its transit connections and proximity to San Francisco, Oakland’s African-American population, which already declined by one third between 1990 and 2010, faces a new threat. The San Francisco Chronicle explored how waves of new residents are changing the face of West Oakland, and the East Bay Express documented that large real estate investment firms have profited from the foreclosure crisis and helped drive Oakland home prices up 64% from 2012 to 2013. This impact has been felt particularly in West and East Oakland, where predatory lending, followed by foreclosures and speculation... on homes, have eroded the relatively high rates of homeownership by people of color.

Not only does real estate speculation stress low-income urban neighborhoods, it drives families to far-flung areas beyond traditional suburbs, where there may be fewer economic opportunities. Recent research shows that low-income people and people of color are moving to places like Vallejo, Antioch and Fairfield. Although Oakland and Richmond still have the highest percentage of African-American residents in the region, eight out of the top 12 most heavily African-American cities in the Bay Area are smaller suburban and “exurban” communities further from job centers and services.

The rise of suburban poverty threatens to destroy the economic integration and mobility that make the Bay Area strong. As New York Times columnist Paul Krugman observed, low-income people are often “Stranded by Sprawl.” Interpreting data from the Equality of Opportunity Project, he concluded that smart growth increases economic mobility. The researchers found that “[a]reas in which low income individuals were residentially segregated from middle income individuals were also particularly likely to have low rates of upward mobility.”

Krugman notes that because low-income Bay Area residents have historically enjoyed comparatively high access to transit and jobs. “In San Francisco a child born into the bottom fifth of the income distribution has an 11% chance of making it into the top fifth, but in Atlanta the corresponding number is only 4%.” The Bay Area’s effort to intensify development near transit may undermine this mobility.

Displacement undermines California’s environmental goals as well. Many people pushed out of the urban core commute long distances in high-polluting cars to return to their old neighborhoods to work, worship and socialize. Ensuring that people of all income levels can live and work in greener, transit-connected neighborhoods is vital to combatting climate change.

In order to be “smart,” growth must be equitable—increasing opportunities for low-income people and people of color rather than pushing them to the literal fringes of society. Equitable growth is smarter for everyone, as demonstrated in 2013 by the community-developed Equity, Environment and Jobs (EEJ) alternative to Plan Bay Area. Developed by the 6 Wins Network, a regional equity coalition, the EEJ was found to be the “environmentally superior” vision for our region when compared to several scenarios that were evaluated as part of the Environmental Impact Report.

EBHO, Public Advocates and dozens of other allies in the 6 Wins Network are fighting for investment without displacement in low-income urban communities and communities of color—grounding development policies in real community needs, protecting tenants, investing in workforce opportunities, building and preserving affordable housing, and improving public health.

Without such policies, the Bay Area’s notable economic mobility may soon be a thing of the past.

By Sam Tepperman-Gelfant, Public Advocates Inc.
In July 2013, the Association of Bay Area Governments and the Metropolitan Transportation Commission adopted Plan Bay Area, an ambitious land use and transportation blueprint for reducing greenhouse gas emissions. The plan steers new growth to higher-density developments close to transit in designated Priority Development Areas (PDAs).

Throughout the process, advocates have focused on ensuring that transit-oriented development brings opportunity rather than displacement to low-income people and communities of color (see “Out of the Frying Pan” on page 12). To make this happen, EBHO and our members must focus on how Plan Bay Area plays out in local communities.

While Plan Bay Area sets targets for growth and criteria for transportation investments, implementation is largely the responsibility of local governments. That means our attention must now turn to Specific Plans and Housing Elements, the city plans that determine land use, as well as housing sites, production goals and policies.

Public benefits zoning offers one promising way to make new development equitable. Also known as “land value recapture,” public benefits zoning means that when governmental action results in higher land values, the benefits of the increase will be shared with the community rather than flowing exclusively to private landowners. (This public action could include land use and zoning decisions, or investment in transportation and infrastructure that makes areas more attractive.) In communities where Specific Plans will encourage transit-oriented development, we advocate incorporating public benefits zoning to require higher levels of affordable homes. While market conditions may not yet be ripe enough, cities must put policies in place now so that developers can plan accordingly—and so that cities build in public benefits before lower-income people are pushed out.

Now that cities’ housing production targets are closely tied to Plan Bay Area, EBHO is following the Housing Element update process in seven East Bay cities that have both high housing needs and high opportunity. We are advancing policies and strategies for equitable development in PDAs, with particular emphasis on including homes for a range of incomes, creating effective anti-displacement policies, and ensuring that opportunity sites for affordable housing will score competitively for tax credits.

We’re also working with other regional advocacy groups to promote a common policy platform for Housing Elements. Focusing on “policies, programs, and parcels,” this list provides cities with best practices for anti-displacement and inclusion, local funding sources, site and building regulations, and state requirements such as zoning for emergency shelters.

For more information on this platform, or to get involved in our efforts on local plans, contact Jeff Levin at jeff@ebho.org.

How Do We Fund Housing in a Post-Redevelopment World?

When the state of California eliminated Redevelopment, it left a major hole in funding for affordable homes, made worse by cuts to federal programs and exhausted state bond funds. Advocates and developers are now searching for new funding sources to close the gap. Here are some promising alternatives:

“Boomerang” Funds
When Redevelopment was dismantled, the former tax increment funds didn’t go away; they were simply reallocated. After fulfilling obligations such as bond debt, the residual or “boomerang” funds are distributed back to the cities, county, schools, and other taxing entities. Though the funds are no longer designated for redevelopment, many cities and counties are choosing to set aside funds for affordable homes. In 2013, EBHO successfully led a campaign to set aside 25% of boomerang funds in Oakland (see The Power of Resident Organizing on page 8), and EBHO is advocating for a similar policy in Alameda County.

New Dedicated State Funds
The California Homes and Jobs Act (SB 391) would establish a new dedicated source of state housing funds, based on a document-recording fee on real estate transactions (excluding home purchases). EBHO is working with a statewide coalition to get the bill passed in 2014.

Redevelopment 2.0
Legislative proposals would establish a new kind of tax increment financing for economic development, focused primarily on Priority Development Areas (PDAs) close to transit. Advocates will push for a mandatory set-aside for affordable homes, particularly to avoid displacement in the PDAs.

Cap-and-Trade Funds
California’s climate action legislation, AB 32, includes provisions for a cap-and-trade system that generates funds from the sale of greenhouse gas emissions permits. Those funds must be used for purposes consistent with climate change goals, and 25% of the funds must be used for disadvantaged communities. Advocates are making the case that funding affordable housing should be mandatory.

Bond Measures/Tax Increases
Some cities have passed or are considering new bonds or special taxes to fund affordable housing. Possible sources include business taxes or real estate transfer taxes.

Inclusionary Housing In-Lieu Fees
Most inclusionary zoning ordinances allow payment of an in-lieu fee when a developer doesn’t want to build the required affordable units. While this means that individual projects are not mixed-income, the funds can be directed to other parcels or targeted to much lower-income households.

Residential and Commercial Development Impact Fees
Some cities have established development impact fees for affordable housing. These can be adopted without a ballot vote, but require a “nexus study” documenting the linkage between the development and an increased need for affordable housing.

The need for affordable homes continues to intensify, so EBHO and our members and partners are advocating for creative strategies to fund the next generation of affordable homes.

By Jeff Levin, EBHO

Oakland residents rally to win “boomerang funds.”
Finding a great, affordable home can be challenging, but the tips below can help. Call 211 or contact EBHO and the organizations on the following pages for more information.

Steps to Find Affordable Housing

Step 1: Learn about different kinds of affordable housing

Some affordable homes are operated and funded by public agencies or non-profits, which keep costs within reach for lower-income people. Other programs will help you afford housing on the private market. See “What is Affordable Housing” on page 6 to learn more about affordable housing options. It’s also important to know your rights. Fair housing laws protect you from discrimination, and you have legal rights as a renter or a homeowner—contact the legal organizations on page 25 for assistance.

Non-Profit Housing

Non-profit affordable housing developers like those featured on pages 24–25 offer well-designed and professionally-managed homes. Properties may have varying eligibility requirements for tenants. Some buildings offer services such as youth and senior activities, financial education, counseling, health services or computer labs. Find out about housing opportunities by calling the organizations listed on page 24 and visiting their websites.

Section 8 (Housing Choice Voucher Program)

The Housing Choice Voucher Program—better known as Section 8—is a federally-funded program managed by local public housing authorities. A Section 8 voucher helps close the gap between rent and your income so you can afford an apartment in the private market. Seek out landlords who accept vouchers. Unfortunately, federal budget cuts have made it difficult to obtain a new Section 8 voucher; contact your public housing authority on page 25 for more information.

Public Housing

Public housing may be an option depending on your income. Many public housing properties have been renovated in partnership with non-profit developers. Contact your local public housing authority, listed on page 25.

Affordable Homeownership

Renting is a great option for many households. But if you’re thinking about buying a home, contact the organizations on page 25 about homebuyer assistance programs. Community Land Trusts may also offer an affordable homeownership option. If you’re struggling with your mortgage payments, see the foreclosure counseling resources on page 25.

General Housing Assistance

If you need help with a security deposit, rent payment, emergency housing or shelter, or tenant/landlord issues, contact the housing, shelter, and emergency resources organizations on page 25.

Apply to as many affordable housing properties as you can. Be persistent and informed, and advocate for more affordable housing in your community!
Step 2: Get your finances and credit ready

Credit Check
Obtain your credit report early, and be prepared to tell prospective landlords about any problems and the steps you’ve taken to address them. Certain landlords will accept a poor credit history if you have good references and can demonstrate the ability to pay through proof of employment, a higher security deposit, or a co-signer. If you need help, contact a credit counseling agency.

Security Deposit
If the security deposit is a challenge, some programs can help you pay move-in costs—see page 25. Some landlords are also willing to accept a deposit in installments.

Income, Savings and Budgeting
Make sure that you can afford transportation, child care, health care and other costs along with rent or mortgage—and save for the future. Ideally, your housing costs should take up no more than one third of your income. The agencies on page 25 can help you create a financial plan.

Step 3: Check to see if your income qualifies

Affordable housing is reserved for people with lower incomes, which includes working people and people of all backgrounds. You must fall within a certain eligible range, depending on the property (see the income chart on page 6 for examples of income ranges). All sources of income will be considered. Find out if you qualify by inquiring with a specific property or non-profit developer. If you have a Section 8 Housing Choice Voucher; ask if the property will accept it.

■ Family: You may be a single parent with children, a two-parent family with or without children, or two or more persons who have chosen to live together.

■ Transitional or supportive: Housing for people emerging from homelessness or foster care, or in need of special services.

Identify how many bedrooms you need, and any other needs such as wheelchair access. Finally, be aware that housing providers cannot discriminate based on race, ethnicity, gender, national origin, family status, or other protected classes. However, you may face challenges qualifying for federally-funded housing if you are undocumented or if you have a criminal record. Non-profit and community-based organizations can inform you about your options.

Step 4: Identify your housing needs and preferences

Think about the location and the amenities that are best for you, but also be flexible and consider several cities and kinds of housing to increase your chances of finding the right place.

Non-profit housing is often targeted to certain populations:

■ Senior: Generally, you or your spouse/partner must be at least 62 years old or older. Children are usually not allowed.

■ Special Needs: You must have a documented condition such as a mental, physical or developmental disability. Some properties serve only people with these needs, while others have apartments designated for people with a particular status.

Step 5: Contact non-profit housing developers and housing authorities to apply

■ Check the websites of non-profit developers often—see page 24.

■ Call and ask for a list of properties, including those under construction. Ask to be added to the interest list for properties that meet your needs and income level.

■ Get on as many waitlists as you can by calling each property. Ask for an application, or go to the property to get an application. Submit it by the deadline.

■ Once you have submitted your applications, let each property know if you move or change your phone number. To remain on a waitlist, you must be in regular contact with the site manager of each property. Ask to find out the best way to do this.

The Many Faces of Affordable Housing

Mayme Lincoln
Bancroft Senior Homes, Oakland — Christian Church Homes

Mayme Lincoln is a senior with a kind heart and an indomitable spirit. She’s lived in Bancroft Senior Homes for four years. After retiring from her job as a property manager and experiencing two strokes and back surgery, Mayme needed to find an affordable home that could accommodate her fixed income and health concerns.

Living at Bancroft has made a major difference in Mayme’s life: she no longer has “the stress of not knowing from day to day where [she’s] going to live…. Housing encompasses so much. It means food to eat, it means a place to stay, it means safety, and it means community, camaraderie and love,” says Mayme.

At Bancroft, Mayme strives to empower her neighbors by encouraging them to live vivaciously, remain informed, and support one another. “I’m just trying to get everyone to understand how important affordable housing is to each and every one of us…. We need to understand that we are worth something, and we need to be able to speak out.”

Mayme is a strong advocate for affordable housing in the East Bay. She participates in many community planning processes, including the Oakland Sustainable Neighborhoods Initiative, and she is a leader in EBHO’s Resident and Community Organizing Program. She hopes to eventually earn her Bachelor’s degree in social work and to further engage in affordable housing policymaking.

Mayme dreams of seeing “a lot more affordable housing” so that residents can come out of poverty. Until then, Mayme will continue to advocate, educate and celebrate the seniors at Bancroft and in the greater Oakland community.

“Housing encompasses so much. It means food to eat, it means a place to stay, it means safety, and it means community, camaraderie and love.”

Affordable housing is about building communities and creating relationships and, most importantly, it’s about people. Here, seven residents of affordable homes share their life journeys, struggles, triumphs and aspirations for the future. You may find that their goals and dreams are not so different from your own.

In these pages, you’ll meet seniors advocating for healthy and flourishing neighborhoods, a mother who’s raising her children while also running her own small business, and others whose lives have been dramatically changed by having a safe and secure place to live.

EBHO thanks these residents for sharing their experiences and Mika Matsumota for capturing their stories.

www.EBHO.org — 30 Years: Built to Last
Brenda Leon, a hard-working and friendly mother of four, was born and raised in Fremont. After losing her house in a difficult divorce, Brenda and her children “had to start from scratch.” They moved in with her parents, living together in a single bedroom. Driving through her neighborhood one day, Brenda noticed MidPen Housing’s Century Village Apartments. She decided to apply, and her application was accepted a month later.

Brenda’s teenagers, Nicko and Alynna, love the after-school program: it takes them on trips “to places they’d never been before, like to the beach.” Her twin sons, Diego and Gabriel, received presents from MidPen during the holidays. Brenda explains that “the resources that they have here for the kids are a huge saving grace, because I wouldn’t be able to provide those things for them.”

Brenda also won a scholarship from MidPen that allowed her to attend culinary school. She continues to work full-time as a medical assistant, but she’s also launched her own business, Betty Cakes Pastry Shop. Within the next five years, Brenda hopes to “pay back” MidPen’s generosity by focusing full-time on her pastry shop. She feels that creating “something in my own community where I’ve grown up in would be really nice.” Now equipped with a secure home and the skills and credentials to match her passion, Brenda looks forward to what the future holds for both her shop and her family. She hopes to make Fremont a sweeter place, one chocolate croissant at a time.

With his huge smile and welcoming heart, Joseph Robinson is one of five residents at Magnolia Terrace, a housing development that serves people who are developmentally disabled. Originally hailing from Louisiana, Joseph was raised by his grandmother in East Oakland and later lived with his aunt and cousins. After his aunt passed away in 2009, Joseph received help to move into Magnolia Terrace.

Although Joseph lives on a fixed income, Magnolia Terrace provides him with a comfortable and supportive home. Joseph loves that he can get everything he needs from nearby shopping centers, grocery stores and restaurants. “I love it. And I don’t have to worry about going too far.”

Joseph also visits the Henry and Henry Center in Oakland, where he can work on the computer and participate in social activities such as bowling and holiday celebrations. In his free time, Joseph enjoys going on walks and helping his neighbors clean their apartments. He especially enjoys cooking and trying new recipes that he sees on cooking shows.

At Magnolia Terrace, Joseph has the freedom to enjoy his life and the community. He wants everyone who’s looking for affordable housing to know that they should “keep on trying. Don’t give up. Don’t stop. You gotta go out there and go for it.”

“It has been a blessing. I would have never been able to go to culinary school on my own.”

Barbara Pumnill

HOPE Project, Hayward — Abode Services

Seeing her radiant smile and positive attitude, you wouldn’t guess that Barbara Pumnill was once homeless. After separating from her husband and losing her business and custody of her children six years ago, Barbara found herself living on the streets. To survive, Barbara lived in a tent, recycled for money, and relied on meals from local churches. For two and a half years, Barbara also visited the HOPE Van, run by Abode Services, which provided her with doctor check-ups and medication. Through the HOPE Van, Barbara met an Abode Services worker who offered to help her find a home.

With help from Abode Services, Barbara moved into her home in Hayward, where she has been living for two and a half years. Since becoming stable, Barbara has re-established a connection with her five children, and is currently working to regain custody. She hopes to reunite with them, saying: “I just want to focus on my kids when they come back and give them all my undivided attention.” To prepare for her children’s homecoming, Barbara is taking parenting classes and working with Abode Services to find a larger home to accommodate her family.

To Barbara, affordable housing has meant all the difference—it has offered her a fresh start. “It’s changed my life,” Barbara explains. “Now that I’m here, I’m stable mentally, emotionally. I’m grounded now.”

Chenoa Denard

Bay Point Homes — Habitat for Humanity East Bay/Silicon Valley

Chenoa Denard knows the importance of a safe and supportive home life. Before moving to Bay Point, Denard, her four children and her younger sister all lived in West Oakland. Although Chenoa had a steady job as the branch manager for a local credit union, living in the neighborhood was a “challenge” because it was not safe. Chenoa didn’t feel comfortable letting her children play outside. Instead, she kept her children involved in organized sports teams and other extracurricular activities.

Although initially she didn’t believe that she would qualify with Habitat for Humanity, Chenoa applied in 2013 and discovered she was eligible for a home in Bay Point. To help fund the house, Chenoa and her friends have worked 250 “sweat equity” (volunteer) hours with Habitat. Chenoa encourages anyone looking for affordable housing to always keep fighting. “Never count yourself out…. (Never) let them tell you ‘no,’ because you never know what might happen.”

More than anything else, Chenoa is excited for her children. “I just want them to be kids,” Chenoa explains. “You know, to be able to play outside, run down the street. They don’t have that opportunity now, I’m just ready for them to actually feel like they’re kids.” And in their new home in Bay Point, the Denard family will be free to play, run, study and grow.
Since moving to Oakland in 1969, Karen Smulevitz has always been politically engaged with her community. Before living in Palo Vista Senior Apartments, Karen spent 13 years in a poorly-managed apartment building that was “not up to code.” Because the conditions there were “not healthy or clean,” Karen was often hospitalized for cases of pneumonia.

When Karen heard about a lottery for housing, she submitted an application and soon after moved into Palo Vista, where she and her dog Ebony have now been living since 2012. With healthier living conditions and affordable rent, Karen no longer suffers from episodic pneumonia or significant financial stress.

A leader in EBHO’s Resident and Community Organizing Program, Karen is a strong advocate for affordable housing. She believes that “everyone deserves a decent place to live.” In 2013, Karen spoke before the City Council and helped convince them to devote 25% of Oakland’s former redevelopment funds to affordable housing. Karen now volunteers with the Oakland Sustainable Neighborhoods Initiative (OSNI) to revamp the economic, commercial and housing development of International Boulevard, a major corridor of East Oakland poised for big changes.

Says Karen, “I’d like people to realize that...everyone benefits when all those who need housing have decent housing that’s clean and safe and attractive and comfortable. When people have that security, life is better.” With her own secure home, Karen can continue to help create the “vibrant community” in Oakland that she envisions.

“Everyone deserves a decent place to live. And I just hope that Oakland can be a better place...a model for what a good city can do.”

York May Wong
Noble Tower, Oakland — East Bay Asian Local Development Corporation

At Noble Tower Senior Apartments, everyone knows Mrs. York May Wong. As an avid leader of the weekly sewing group, a cook for special Friday lunches, and the official decorator for all major holidays, the 82-year-old Mrs. Wong brings energy and fun to her community.

Mrs. Wong has always been a hard worker; just three days after arriving in the United States in 1968 with her husband and children, Mrs. Wong started working at the naval base in Alameda. Only five years later, Mrs. Wong’s husband passed away from cancer. Because she loved her husband deeply, she promised him that she would never marry again, and that she would raise their four children on her own. In the following years, Mrs. Wong worked four jobs to pay off the bills from her husband’s radiation treatment. She worked to buy a home, raise her children, and send them to colleges such as Harvard and UC Berkeley. Often she would sleep only three hours a night. Mrs. Wong retired in 1996, and eight years later she moved into Noble Tower.

After so many years of toil, Mrs. Wong loves her home in Noble Tower, and she describes the community as “amazing” and very “loving.” Mrs. Wong’s dream is to keep giving back to Noble Tower by taking care of the recreational center, continuing to sew outfits and decorations for the residents, and living a healthful and abundant life with her neighbors.

“This is amazing housing. Everyone here works together and is healthy and loving.”

www.EBHO.org — 30 Years: Built to Last
Since 1970, MidPen Housing has developed over 100 affordable communities across ten California counties. Our award-winning communities benefit thousands of residents and help revitalize neighborhoods.

Thank you, EBHO, for your continued support of vibrant, affordable communities like these!
A Tour of Today’s Affordable Housing

Take a tour of some of the East Bay’s best affordable housing: the places that working families, people with special needs, seniors and formerly homeless people call home. The properties featured here are developed and managed by mission-driven organizations within EBHO’s membership. Whether they’re apartments or single-family homes, newly built or recently renovated, they’re all designed to provide safe, secure and quality housing that’s built to last.

Emerald Vista: Wexford Way & Carlow Court — Eden Housing

6900 Mariposa Circle, Dublin

A revitalized complete community

Who Lives There: Families (Wexford) and seniors (Carlow)

Property Management: Eden Housing Management, Inc.

Architect: BAR Architects

General Contractor: Midstate Construction

Completed: December 2012

Size: 378 homes (Wexford) and 72 homes (Carlow)

Density: 17 units/acre

Funding & Financing: City of Dublin, Housing Authority of the County of Alameda, Wells Fargo, FHLB, Silicon Valley Bank, California Community Reinvestment Corporation, Low Income Housing Tax Credit, Section 8 Project-Based Vouchers

Emerald Vista is a master-planned community that has transformed the 24-acre Arroyo Vista public housing site from 150 affordable units into a vibrant new mixed-use, mixed-income community with nearly 400 families and households. Serving a broad cross-section of the Dublin community, Emerald Vista provides 180 affordable apartments for families and seniors at Wexford Way and Carlow Court, as well as 184 market-rate homes and 14 below-market-rate homes. The development includes a community center, a Kidango child care center, active open space areas, and access to a regional trail along Alamo Creek. Emerald Vista was built through an innovative partnership between the City of Dublin, the Housing Authority of the County of Alameda, Eden Housing and KB Home. The award-winning $54.2 million affordable development was built using green building technology and materials, and it gives families access to technology training, financial literacy, community involvement, green education and the opportunity for improved health, wellness, and safety. Seniors benefit from programs designed to help them age in place and live independently for as long as possible.

California Hotel
East Bay Asian Local Development Corporation (EBALDC)

3501 San Pablo Avenue, Oakland

Historic landmark, cornerstone of a healthy neighborhood

Who Lives There: Families, people in need of supportive housing
Property Management: EBALDC
Architect: Gelfand Partners Architects
General Contractor: Cahill Contractors, Inc.
Completed: January 2014
Size: 137 apartments
Density: 161 units/acre
Funding & Financing: City of Oakland, California HCD, Mental Health Services Act: State Department of Mental Health, Alameda County Behavioral Health Services, CalHFA, Alameda County HCD, Oakland Housing Authority, StopWaste.Org, Corporation for Supportive Housing, Enterprise, U.S. Bank

Listed on the National Register of Historic Places, the California Hotel was built in 1929. It was one of the first racially-integrated hotels in Oakland, and its ornate ballroom was a famous gathering spot where many big names in jazz and blues came to play. The hotel closed in 1971; 16 years later Oakland Community Housing Inc. acquired it, fixed it up, and offered it as affordable rental housing. In February 2012, EBALDC acquired the property.

EBALDC has renovated this Oakland landmark into 137 studio, one- and two-bedroom apartments. The famed ballroom now serves as a community room, and People’s Grocery operates an urban farm and gardening programs on-site. LifeLong Medical Care provides on-site supportive services. The California Hotel is also a cornerstone of EBALDC’s Healthy Neighborhoods work in the San Pablo Avenue Corridor; EBALDC and others train residents to advocate for improved public safety, healthy food access, transit options, green spaces, and a more age-friendly neighborhood.

The Ambassador — Resources for Community Development (RCD)

3610 Peralta Street, Emeryville

New green homes at the gateway to the East Bay

Who Lives There: Families
Property Management: The John Stewart Company
Architect: Kava Massih Architects
General Contractor: Segue Construction
Size: 68 homes
Density: 80 units/acre
Funding & Financing: City of Emeryville, Wells Fargo Bank permanent loan, Alameda County HCD, Wells Fargo Bank / Federal Home Loan Bank (AHP), Wells Fargo Bank Affordable Housing Community Development Corp.

The Ambassador is named after the commercial laundry that formerly occupied the site, and it represents a $28 million public/private investment to eliminate blight and provide much-needed homes in Emeryville. Three new buildings offer studios and one-, two- and three-bedroom rental homes to very low-income (30-50% AMI) families and individuals. Residents live close to local transit and a shopping center with a supermarket, and have access to employment opportunities in retail services, technology and multimedia, because the development is located in a regional job center.

The Ambassador features two community rooms with kitchens, a computer learning center, and a children’s garden and playground. Residents have access to free on-site support services including educational workshops, youth activities and community gatherings.

In keeping with RCD’s core value of sustainability, the property’s green features—including a photovoltaic system, recycled-content carpet and drought-tolerant landscaping—will reduce utility bills and promote resident health. The construction process minimized environmental impact through vigilant recycling and waste diversion. The proximity to shopping, services, recreation, jobs and transit make The Ambassador an ideal pedestrian-oriented community.
Los Robles — EAH Housing

32300 Almaden Boulevard, Union City

Enriching residents’ lives with green improvements

Who Lives There: People with disabilities, working families and older adults
Property Management: EAH Housing
Architect: Basis Architecture & Consulting, Inc.
General Contractor: Precision General Commercial Contractors, Inc.
Completed: February 2013
Size: 140 units
Density: 14 units/acre
Funding & Financing: US Bank, Hudson Housing Capital, Los Robles Apartments, Inc., Stopwaste.org

Los Robles provides GreenPoint Rated homes for working families, older adults, and people with disabilities. EAH Housing recently rehabilitated Los Robles as part of its long-term strategy to preserve existing affordable housing properties for all current and future residents.

The renovation of the 39-year-old property focused on two things: improving residents’ comfort and reducing utility costs. To reduce utility costs, EAH Housing installed Energy Star appliances and lights, dual-pane windows, high-efficiency hot water heaters and additional insulation. In addition to these sustainable improvements, EAH Housing built a new photovoltaic system that incorporates solar carports and offsets 75 to 80% of the energy use in the common areas. Cost savings from these green improvements have helped free up resources which EAH is investing back into the property and into residents’ lives: they’ve built a new barbeque area, added new paths of travel around the property, and remodeled seven units to make them fully ADA accessible.

Fargo Senior Center — Christian Church Homes

Fargo Avenue, San Leandro

A senior haven for decades to come

Who Lives There: Seniors
Property Management: CCH
Architect: Mayers Architecture
General Contractor: Branagh Inc.
Completed: March 2014
Size: 75 apartments
Density: 34 units per acre
Funding & Financing: JP Morgan Chase, HCD Multi-Family Housing Program, HUD Section 8

Fargo Senior Center, a development that allows low-income seniors to age in place, is a powerful example of a non-profit’s commitment to residents and a neighborhood. Originally owned by a partnership between a Jewish and a Presbyterian congregation, Fargo was acquired by CCH, which had managed the property for years, in 2012. As owner, CCH embarked on a major rehabilitation to ensure long-term preservation and sustainability. The campus of four two-story wood frame buildings includes 45 studios, 28 one-bedrooms and two managers’ apartments. The buildings have undergone significant improvements to their exterior façades, building systems and interiors, along with environmental abatement and energy efficiency upgrades.

The campus has a service coordinator, and it serves lunch to residents through a partnership with local non-profit Spectrum Community Services Inc. The rehabilitation of Fargo Senior Center encourages independent living through accessibility and safety updates, and proximity to transit and amenities. The site had served San Leandro for 40 years, and it will now be preserved for another 50. Despite decades of swings in the real estate market, this property will provide homes for local seniors for nearly a century.

Los Robles provides GreenPoint Rated homes for working families, older adults, and people with disabilities. EAH Housing recently rehabilitated Los Robles as part of its long-term strategy to preserve existing affordable housing properties for all current and future residents.

The renovation of the 39-year-old property focused on two things: improving residents’ comfort and reducing utility costs. Project Pride — East Bay Community Recovery Project (EBCRP), SAHA, and Bonnewit Development Services

Support and stability for women and children

Who Lives There: Extremely low-income pregnant and parenting women with special needs and their children

Property Management: East Bay Community Recovery Project

Architect: Gelfand Partners Architects

General Contractor: JUV, Inc.

Completed: September 2012

Size: 20 units, 30 residents

Funding & Financing: City of Oakland RDA and Neighborhood Stabilization Program, California HCD Emergency Housing and Assistance Program – Capital Development, FHLB Affordable Housing Program via the Bank of Alameda, Corporation for Supportive Housing, The San Francisco Foundation, Alameda County Behavioral Health Care Services

When SAHA and EBCRP partnered to renovate a foreclosed property in West Oakland, they not only spruced up the street, they also provided a secure, healthy new start for pregnant and parenting women. At Project Pride, a program that has served women and children since 1994, more than half of the units are reserved for formerly homeless households, and all units serve extremely low-income households and those with substance use disabilities.

The development provides extensive supportive services on-site. Amenities include a fully-equipped community kitchen, a dining room, three community rooms, computers, laundry, an on-site cooperative child care center and recreational space. Residents also reap the benefits of nearby recreational facilities, grocery stores, banks, educational programs, religious institutions and social services.

EBCRP honors Luther Jessie, Director of Residential Services and Project Pride, who passed away in January 2014 and whose excellent work helped make this program possible.

Jack Capon Villa — Satellite Affordable Housing Associates (SAHA) and Housing Consortium of the East Bay (HCEB)

2216 Lincoln Avenue, Alameda

Adults with developmental disabilities

Who Lives There: Extremely and very low-income families

Property Management: Satellite Affordable Housing Associates

Architect: Van Meter Williams Pollack

General Contractor: Segue Construction, Inc.

Size: 19 apartments

Density: 39 units/acre

Funding & Financing: Housing Authority of the City of Alameda, Alameda County HCD, FHLB San Francisco, Bank of Alameda (now Bank of Marin), Bank of America (construction loan), Enterprise Community Investment, Inc., Bank of America / Merrill Lynch

Jack Capon, an Alameda resident, was a long-time supporter of the Special Olympics and an advocate for children and adults with developmental disabilities. The development named after him, Jack Capon Villa, is home to extremely and very low-income adults who may benefit from special services. It contains 16 one-bedroom and three two-bedroom apartments in a neighborhood that’s rich with community services and located near transit and shopping. The development is designed to increase resident interactions in mobility-accessible environments, and it’s expected to receive a GreenPoint Rating of 152 or higher and 75 Bay-Friendly Landscaping points.

As the first housing community for people with developmental disabilities in Alameda (and the final project funded by redevelopment in that city), Jack Capon Villa manifests the vision of many affordable housing advocates and advocates for people with developmental disabilities. It was made possible by political and financial support from the City of Alameda, its housing authority and its former redevelopment agency.
Terraza Palmera at St. Joseph’s — BRIDGE Housing Corporation

1272 26th Avenue, Oakland

Something old and something new

Who Lives There: Families
Property Management: BRIDGE Property Management Company
Architect: Van Meter Williams Pollack, LLP
General Contractor: James E. Roberts-Obayashi Corporation
Completed: November 2013
Size: 62 apartments
Density: 47 units per acre
Funding & Financing: City of Oakland, City of Oakland RDA, U.S. Bank, Union Bank, Northern California Community Loan Fund/Lower San Antonio Community Development Fund, Evelyn and Walter Haas, Jr. Fund, California HCD (Prop 1C Infill), Oakland Housing Authority, FHLB of San Francisco

Terraza Palmera represents the second phase of redevelopment for the historic St. Joseph’s complex. The Main Building was originally constructed in 1912 as a convalescent home for low-income seniors; four smaller buildings were constructed between 1912 and 1947. The property was converted into commercial space in the late 1970s with minimal regard for historic preservation. In 1984, the City of Oakland designated St. Joseph’s a local historic landmark. BRIDGE Housing acquired the site in 2006, began renovations in 2010, and is awaiting final approval of the site as a National Historic Landmark.

Fifty-eight of Terraza Palmera’s 62 homes occupy a new four-story building. The historic Laundry Building and Smokehouse offers four units, and the Guardhouse was restored as a multi-purpose community room. Other amenities include a courtyard garden, a terrace, and sunny lobbies. Together, Terraza Palmera and the senior property (completed in 2011) form a unique multigenerational, mixed-use campus in the heart of the Fruitvale neighborhood.

Century Village — MidPen Housing

41299 Paseo Padre Parkway, Fremont

Greening and enhancing a community for the future

Who Lives There: Families
Property Management: MidPen Housing
Architect: Dahlin Group
General Contractor: Segue Construction
Completed: September 2013
Size: 100 units, 268 residents
Density: 27 units/acre
Funding & Financing: CalHFA New Issue Bond Program, California Tax Credit Allocation Committee, Union Bank, City of Fremont

MidPen Housing acquired Century Village in 1995 in order to convert it from people with developmental disabilities to affordable housing. Century Village underwent an extensive rehabilitation starting in January 2013; it welcomed all residents back in the fall of 2013. Century Village is now entirely affordable, serving residents who earn between 30% and 60% of the Area Median Income.

The rehabilitation improves the community’s long-term performance and appearance as well as the residents’ quality of life. New features include photovoltaic and solar thermal systems, which are projected to decrease energy use by 40% and offset the community’s common electricity costs. Other enhancements include exterior panel siding and added insulation; new double-pane vinyl windows; new heating/cooling systems and upgraded appliances; and low-flow water fixtures.

Originally built in 1972, Century Village’s renovation includes a better layout, expanded spaces for offices and community areas, and a large after-school program classroom which will support curriculum from the high-performing local school district. Additionally, several residents participate in Fremont’s Housing Scholarship Program, which links affordable housing with child care and job training. Located near BART, major bus lines and shopping centers, Century Village is a transit-oriented and pedestrian-friendly community.

All faiths believe in human dignity. All religions believe in shelter as a basic right.

The faith community is proud to celebrate thirty years of involvement with East Bay Housing Organizations. The diverse communities that make up EBHO’s Interfaith Communities United are proud to celebrate our tenth anniversary!

We pray that one day, this work will be done and all people will have a safe place to lay their head. Until that day, we commit to standing with EBHO for as long as it takes!

Honoring David Glover
July 15, 1952—May 22, 2013

David Glover was a leader, mentor, visionary, innovator and dedicated social justice advocate. As the executive director of OCCUR, David helped to incubate the nascent East Bay Housing Organizations (EBHO) — then called Oakland Housing Organizations (OHO). OCCUR became OHO’s fiscal sponsor in 1984, convening and facilitating OHO until it became independent ten years later.

EBHO stands strong today, 30 years later, as part of David Glover’s legacy of passionate advocacy for the needs of low-income people and neighborhoods.

In May 2013, David passed away after a battle with cancer: EBHO is proud to honor his life and his many achievements.

“David was an amazing leader and advocate... He was a social entrepreneur. He was inclusive. He was an innovator and open to new ideas. He was all in for social justice yet focused on the practical—the work that could really effect change in people’s daily lives.

David really was a visionary—calling things out before they became popularized..... Just as importantly, David was a friend and mentor. His buoyant enthusiasm, openness, honesty and sense of humor were several of his many hallmarks.”

Maryann Leshin, EBHO’s first staff member, hired by David Glover in 1984, and EBHO long-timer

The legacy of leadership

Great leaders leave a mark on the communities they serve. They bring people together, create a consensus and work hard to make positive change. What is accomplished today can last for generations.

East Bay Housing Organization, thank you for creating a lasting legacy of success.
Community

Partnering for the Community

U.S. Bank is proud to support East Bay Housing Organizations

At U.S. Bank, our success is directly related to the success and vitality of the communities we serve. And we believe strong communities help make a strong economy. That’s why we feel it’s important to partner with organizations like East Bay Housing Organizations to provide corporate leadership on issues of community importance. Because no company gains the same strength alone as it can with the help of others.
